INTRODUCTION

Welcome to this module. This is an interactive instructional module that uses both action and collaborative learning styles that provide you with diverse online learning experiences and effective learning processes. This course covers ethics, diversity, life and career skills. Lesson one examines ethics. It begins by tracing the etymological roots of the term ethics. A comprehensive definition of ethics is captured. The branches of ethics are outlined. The basic approaches to ethical decision making are examined. Lesson two discusses the concept of identity and conception and expression of individuality or group affiliations. Different identities which include; nationalism, ethnicity, culture, race, religion, gender and social economic class are captured. The role of different identities in the interaction process is assessed. Lesson three examines the concepts diversity and inclusivity as used in the interaction process. In this lesson we attempt to examine what qualifies a society to be inclusive. It is noted that inclusivity in governance promotes peace and national stability. Three metrics used to measure inclusivity are examined. Lesson four traces the origin, migration and settlement of the people of Kenya. It is noted that the Great Migration into Kenya by the Cushites, Bantus and Nilotes was motivated by a number of factors. Lesson five examines the political and economic organization of ethnic communities in Kenya prior to the establishment of colonialism. Two types of political organization are identified and distinguished; namely centralized and decentralized political systems. The economic organization of ethnic communities in the pre-colonial period is discussed. Finally this lesson examines the impacts of the establishment of colonialism on pre-colonial political and economic organization. Lesson six discusses the colonial episode in Kenya. It begins by addressing the motives behind the scramble, partition and eventual conquest of Africa. African reaction to the imposition of colonial rule is examined. Establishment of colonial rule and the nature of British colonial administration is tackled. Lesson seven examines the structure of the Government of Kenya under devolution. The structure of government at two levels is captured. The functions of the office holders at different levels is outlined. This lesson also discusses the challenges that face devolved governance in Kenya. Lesson eight examines national values and principle of governance. The promotion of good governance is through transparency and accountability is captured. This lesson questions the ability of government to promote transparency and accountability through the elimination of corruption. Lesson nine addresses the concept globalization. It defines globalization as a process by which the world becomes one through interconnectedness and uniformity. The impacts of globalization on African culture are discussed. The question as to whether globalization is positive or negative is addressed. Lesson ten addresses Life and Career Skills (work in progress).

Expected Learning Outcomes

The expected learning outcome will include;

- To Analyze the different meanings and implications of citizenship;
- To Demonstrate the rights and responsibilities attached to the concept of citizenship;
- To Identify what enables or hinders citizens' ability to participate in public affairs;
- To Link citizenship and civic participation to policy options and processes;
- To Illustrate how globalization, conflict, and geopolitics affect citizenship and civic participation;
- To Appraise the role of international law and national policies in enabling or disabling civic participation;
- To Study particular cases of conflict, revolution, and political transformation and how they affect citizenship theory and civic participation.
- To Propose and adopt a paradigm for understanding citizenship and civic participation through a case study.

LESSON ONE

ETHICS AND ITS APPLICATION IN HUMAN ACTIONS

1.1 Introduction

- This lesson examines ethics. It begins by tracing the etymological roots of the term ethics. A comprehensive definition of ethics is captured. The branches of ethics are outlined. Finally the basic approaches to ethical decision making are examined.

1.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 1.2.1 Define the concept ethics
- 1.2.2 Distinguish between the different branches of ethics
- 1.2.3 Explain the basic approaches to ethical decision making

1.2.1 The Concept Ethics and its Branches

- Ethics, also known as moral philosophy, is a branch of philosophy that involves systematizing, defending and recommending concepts of right and wrong conduct. The term comes from the Greek word ethos, which means "character". In philosophy, ethics studies the moral behavior in humans and how one should act. Ethics seeks to resolve questions dealing with human morality concepts such as good and evil, right and wrong and virtue and vice. Ethics is a requirement for human life. It is our means of deciding a course of action. Without it, our actions would be random and aimless. Ethic has four branches namely;

1.2.1.1 Branches of Ethics

(i) Meta Ethics

- Meta ethics examines the nature of morality in general, and what justifies moral judgments. Meta-ethics examines the meaning of moral language and the metaphysics of moral facts. Three questions investigated by Meta ethics are; Are ethical demands capable of being true or not true) or are they, for example, emotional claims? If they are ever true, and if so what is the nature of the facts they represent? If there are moral truths what makes them true, and they are absolutely true or always relative to some individual or society or culture?

(ii) Normative Ethics

- Normative ethics studies the issue of how we ought to live and act. Normative ethics attempts to provide a system of principles, rules and procedures for determining what a person should do and he should not do. Normative ethics investigates standards for the rightness and wrongness of actions. Norms are sentences (rules) that aim to affect an action. Normative sentences include commands, permissions and prohibitions

(iii) Applied Ethics

- Applied ethics is the branch of ethics which investigates the application of ethical theories in actual life. Applied ethics attempts to illuminate the possibility of disagreement about the way theories and principles should be applied. Specific areas of applied ethics are; Medical ethics, Bioethics, Public sector ethics, Welfare ethics, Business ethics, Decision making ethics, Legal ethics(justice), Media ethics and Environmental ethics among others. For example, in medical ethics strict secrecy and confidentiality is required.

(iv) Descriptive Ethics

- Descriptive ethics is the study of people's beliefs about morality. Descriptive ethics is an empirical investigation of people's moral beliefs. Descriptive ethics deals with what people actually believe (or made to believe) to be right or wrong, and accordingly holds up the human actions acceptable or not acceptable or punishable under a custom or law. Customs and laws keep changing from time to time and from society to society. The societies have structured their moral principles as per changing time and have expected people to behave accordingly. Descriptive ethics also called comparative ethics compares the ethics or past and present; ethics of one society and other.

1.2.2 Basic Approaches to Ethical Decision Making

According to Broad (1930) there exist five types of approaches to ethical decision making. These include;

(i) The Rights Approach

- This approach to ethics has its roots in the philosophy of the 18th-century thinker Immanuel Kant and others like him, who focused on the individual's right to choose for herself or himself. According to these philosophers, what makes human beings different from mere things is that people have dignity based on their ability to choose freely what they will do with their lives, and they have a fundamental moral right to have these choices respected. People are not objects to be manipulated; it is a violation of human dignity to use people in ways they do not freely choose. In deciding whether an action is moral or immoral using this approach, then, we must ask, does the action respect the moral rights of everyone? Actions are wrong to the extent that they violate the rights of individuals; the more serious the violation, the more wrongful the action.

(ii) The Utilitarian Approach

- Utilitarianism was conceived in the 19th century by Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill to help legislators determine which laws were morally best. Both Bentham and Mill suggested that ethical actions are those that provide the greatest balance of good over evil. To analyze an issue using the utilitarian approach, we first identify the various courses of action available to us. Second, we ask who will be affected by each action and what benefits or harms will be derived from each. And third, we choose the action that will produce the greatest benefits and the least harm. The ethical action is the one that provides the greatest good for the greatest number. Utilitarianism focuses on the consequences of actions.

(iii) The Virtue Approach

- The virtue approach to ethics assumes that there are certain ideals toward which we should strive. Virtues are attitudes or character traits that enable us to be and to act in ways that develop our highest potential. Honesty, courage, compassion, generosity, fidelity, integrity, fairness, self-control, and prudence are examples of virtues frequently cited throughout the world. Virtues are like habits; that is, once acquired, they become characteristic of a person. Moreover, a person who has developed virtues will be naturally disposed to act in ways consistent with moral principles. The virtuous person is the ethical person.

(iv) The Fairness (or Justice) Approach

- The fairness or justice approach to ethics has its roots in the teachings of the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle, who said that "equals should be treated equally and unequal's unequally." The basic moral question in this approach is: How fair is an action? Does it treat everyone in the same way, or does it show favoritism and discrimination? Favoritism gives benefits to some people without a justifiable reason for singling them out; discrimination imposes burdens on people who are not different from those on whom burdens are not imposed. Both favoritism and discrimination are unjust and wrong. Fairness approach focuses on how fairly or unfairly our actions distribute benefits and burdens among the members of a group.

(v) The Common Good Approach

- This approach to ethics assumes a society comprising individuals whose own good is inextricably linked to the good of the community. Community members are bound by the pursuit of common values and goals. Appeals to the common good urge us to view ourselves as members of the same community, reflecting on broad questions concerning the kind of society we want to become and how we are to achieve that society. While respecting and valuing the freedom of individuals to pursue their own goals, the common-good approach challenges us also to recognize and further those goals we share in common.

LESSON TWO

IDENTITY AND ITS ROLE IN THE INTERACTION PROCESS

2.1 Introduction

- This lesson examine the concept of identity and conception and expression of individuality or group affiliations. Different identities which include; nationalism, ethnicity, culture, race, religion, gender and social economic class are captured. The role of different identities in the interaction process is assessed.

2.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

2.2.1 Define the term identity

1.2.1 Outline the different types of identities in society

1.2.2 Explain the roles that different identities play in the interaction process

2.2.1 Conceptualizing Identity

- We can argue that “identity” is presently used in two linked senses, which may be termed “social” and “personal.” In the former sense, an “identity” refers simply to a social category, a set of persons marked by a label and distinguished by rules deciding membership and (alleged) characteristic features or attributes. In the second sense of personal identity, an identity is some distinguishing characteristic (or characteristics) that a person takes a special pride in or views as socially consequential but more-or-less unchangeable. Thus, “identity” in its present incarnation has a double sense. It refers at the same time to social categories and to the sources of an individual’s self-respect or dignity.

- Identity is a person's conception and expression of their individuality or group affiliations. Identity may further be defined as the distinctive characteristic belonging to any given individual, or shared by all members of a particular social category or group. Identity refers to the ways in which individuals are distinguished in their social relations with other individuals. There exist a number of identities which include; nationality, ethnicity, culture, race, religion, gender, age group, socio-economic status among others.

Next	Role of Different Identities in the Interaction Process

2.2.2 Role of Different Identities in the Interaction Process

(i) Nationalism and National Identity

- Nationalism can be defined a state of mind or a feeling, in which supreme loyalty of the individual is felt to be due to the nation-state. It refers to a sense of identity which individuals rise above tribalism/ethnicity, religion and geographical locality. Nationalism seeks to preserve a nation's culture, by way of pride in national achievements. Nationalism as an identity is associated with the concept of citizenship which is connected to membership in the nation-state. A citizen as a member of a state enjoys the rights and assumes the duties of membership. Another concept associated with nationalism is patriotism which is a cultural attachment to one's homeland

(ii) Ethnicity and Ethnic Identity

- An ethnic group is a group of people whose members identify with each other, through a common heritage, often consisting of a common language, a common culture and an ideology that stresses common ancestry and most likely share the same geographical area. Ethnic identity is the only form of identity that is not chosen by the individual, but rather determined by the family one is born into. It may occur that an individual belongs to multiple ethnic groups, for example, when the individual's parents are from different ethnic groups. Belonging to more than one ethnic group may result in a challenge for adolescent ethnic identity development seeing that individuals may have equal attachment to both ethnic groups, which may lead to confusion and isolation from ethnic groups.

(iii) Culture and Cultural Identity

- Edward B. Taylor is reputed as the scholar who first coined and defined culture in his work Primitive Culture (1871) and reprinted in 1958. Taylor saw culture as that complex whole which includes knowledge, belief, art, morals, law, customs or any other capabilities and habits acquired by man as a member of society. Culture embraces a wide range of human phenomena, material achievements and norms, beliefs, feelings, manners, morals and so on. It is the patterned way of life shared by a particular group of people that claim to share a single origin or descent. Culture serves to distinguish a people from others. Culture is passed on from generation to generation. The acquisition of culture is a result of the socialization process. The child just grows into and within the cultural heritage of his people. He imbibes it. Culture, in traditional society, is not taught; it is caught. The child observes, imbibes and mimics the action of his elders and siblings.

(iv) Race and Racial Identity

- Race can be defined as a group of people united by a common history, language, cultural traits. Although there can be traits of specific "races" such as shape of lips, eyelids, skin pigment, etc, race is simply a way to cause diversity. Race is not biological. It is a social construct. There is no gene or cluster of genes common to all blacks or all whites.

(v) Religion and Religious Identity

- Religion is understood by many as a belief in the Supernatural power or the Supreme Being and their relationship with the nature that surrounds them. Man, being a social animal, is also, therefore, considered a religious being. Religion is also accepted as one of the strongest sources and means of social control. It is considered as one of the earliest institutions of mankind and is found in all the societies of the past and present. A given religion is defined by specific elements of a community of believers: dogmas, sacred books, rites, worship, sacrament, moral prescription, interdicts, and organization. Major world religions include; Judaism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam, Christianity and Traditional African Religion.

(vi) Gender and Gender Identity

- As a concept, gender divides humans into two categories: man and woman. Gender is associated with culture and not nature, it can be defined as socially constructed and culturally construct. It is relational concept that denotes the manner in which women and men are differentiated and ordered in a given socio-cultural context. Gender is distinct from sex. ‘Sex’ refers to the biological characteristics that categorize someone as either female or male; whereas ‘gender’ refers to the socially determined ideas and practices of what it is to be female or male. As opposed to biological designation, gender is a social construction,

LESSON THREE

DIVERSITY AND INCLUSIVITY IN THE INTERACTION PROCESS

2.1 Introduction

- This lesson examine the concepts diversity and inclusivity as used in the interaction process. It is argued here that the diverse nature of humans should be its strength rather than its weakness. In this lesson we attempt to examine what qualifies a society to be inclusive. It is noted that inclusivity in governance promotes peace and national stability. Three metrics used to measure inclusivity are captured.

3.2 .1 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 3.2.1 Define the terms diversity
- 3.2.2 Examine the terms inclusivity and exclusivity
- 3.2.3 Identify the metrics used to measure inclusivity

3.2.1 Diversity and Inclusivity in the Interaction Process

- The concept of diversity encompasses acceptance and respect. It means understanding that each individual is unique, and recognizing our individual differences. These can be along the dimensions of race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, socio-economic status, age, physical abilities, religious beliefs, political beliefs, or other ideologies. In spite of our different identities we should not discriminate others in the process of governance. The diverse nature of humans is its strength, and should be a course for great success. Inclusivity should be the guiding principle in the political process. An Inclusive society is one where its people are valued, respected and supported on equal basis without prejudice. In a number of African countries conflict and war have been as a result of political exclusivity. When people feel that they are not accepted among their own people, then they tend to perpetuate repressive practices which can lead to major violence within a society. Inclusivity in governance promotes peace and national stability. It is often measured based on three metrics:
 - (i) Equal life chances,
 - (ii) Equal concern for people's needs and
 - (iii) Meritocracy- the idea that, rewards and positions in every society should reflect differences in effort and ability, and based on fair competition.

LESSON FOUR

ORIGIN, MIGRATION AND SETTLEMENT OF THE PEOPLE OF KENYA

4.1 Introduction

- The arrival and expansion into Kenya of the ancestors of the above dominant groups took place at more or less the same period. It is believed that the Kenyan communities were involved in very intense internal movements and that it is in the course of these movements that the various clans were formed as well as the settlement of the people into their present – day homelands. The Great Migration into Kenya: Kenyan communities were attracted to Kenya from different regions by good climatic conditions. The country has three main ethno – linguistic groups, namely; Cushitic, Bantu and Nilotic speakers.

4.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

- 4.2.4 Account for the settlement of the Arabs into Kenya

4.2.1 Origin, Migration and Settlement of the Cushites into Kenya

- The Cushitic speakers were the first people to move to Kenya through Lakes Abaya and Turkana. Upon arrival the Cushites found other people with the dental click languages of the Khoisan of South Africa and the Sandawe, Hadza and Iraqwi of Tanzania. In Kenya, Cushitic language speakers are divided into the Eastern and Southern Group. Cushites form a significant minority of Kenya's population. They speak Afro-Asiatic languages, and originally came from Ethiopia and Somalia in north-east Africa. The Southern Cushites were the first of the Cushitic-speaking people to migrate from their homeland in the Horn of Africa. The Dahalo who live in the lower course of River Tana. are the only southern Cushites found in Kenya. The Eastern Cushites include the; Borana,, Somali, Oromo, Gabra, Rendile, and Burji. In Kenya Eastern Cushites live in the arid and semi-arid eastern and North-Eastern parts of Kenya.

4.2.2 Origin, Migration and Settlement of the Bantu into Kenya

- The term Bantu was first coined by Dr. Wilhelm Bleek in a book published in 1862 entitled A Comparative Grammar of South Africa Languages. Bleek observed that nearly every language spoken in the southern third of the African continent had prefixes which could be called “Proto-prefixes” “ntu” to refer to a personality, presupposing a generic relationship and implying a single source. Many other scholars have since studied the Bantu, languages and its speakers ranging from linguistics, anthropologists to historians. The original homeland of the Bantu community of people is believed to have been West Africa along the boundary of what is today Nigeria and Cameroon. Scholars who have studied the Bantu migration into Kenya have identified various waves through which the Bantu have passed. Each of these waves however went through a complex process of expansion, adaptation and settlement. Consequently the Bantu have been grouped into two namely; The Eastern and the Western Bantu of Kenya. The Eastern Bantus entered Kenya through the southern border with Tanzania around Mt Kilimanjaro. They included the Agikuyu, Aembu, Ameru, Akamba, Taita ,Mijikenda and Pokomo. The Western Bantus entered Kenya though the western border with Uganda. They comprised the Abaluyhia, Abagusii, Abakuria and the Abasuba.

4.2.3 Origin, Migration and Settlement of the Nilotes into Kenya

- The term Nilotes or Nilotic is employed to denote a group of people who speak closely related languages, and who are believed to have a common origin. The term Nilotic is itself derived from the name Nile. The Nilotes are found in many parts of the African continent. These include Northeast Africa, including Sudan, Uganda, Kenya and Tanzania. In Kenya, the Nilotic-speaking group is believed to be the second largest after the Bantu speakers. The Nilotes are divided into three groups which include;
 - (i) The Highland Nilotes, who comprises the Kalenjin speakers who live in Kenya's Rift valley region.
 - (ii) Plains Nilotes who comprise the Maasai, Samburu, Turkana, Njemps and the Teso. Outside Kenya, other members of this cluster include the Karamojong' of Uganda, the Bari, Kuku and Kakwa of South Sudan.
 - (iii) River lake Nilotes who comprise of the Luo of Uganda, Tanzania and Kenya as well as the Dinka and Nuer of South Sudan. In Uganda we have the Acholi, Padhola and the Alur.

4.2.4 Pre-Colonial Contacts between East Africa and the External World; Arabic Settlement into Kenya

- East Africa has had contacts with the outside world before the colonial period. One of the outstanding characteristics of the East African coast has been its relative accessibility, not only from the interior but also from the sea. Accessibility from the interior has been a crucial factor in population movements into the coastal belt and helps to explain its ethnic and cultural complexity. The sea on the other hand, has been a means of contact with the outside world. The Periplus of the Erythrean Sea text explains about the Red Sea and the Gulf of Oman, Berbera, Cape Guardafui and Olok as having been green meeting points between East African coastal communities and traders from the north into the Mediterranean world as well as those from Asia. Through these points merchandise from India, Egypt and Rome reached the East African coast. This text reveals that there was commercial traffic along the coast of the Indian Ocean long before the Muslim conquest. The Monsoon winds permitted the shuttle at specific times between Africa, Arabia, and India and favored commercial expansion. It is through trade that Arabs settled, conquered and assimilated the East coast of Africa.

LESSON FIVE

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC ORGANIZATION IN PRE-COLONIAL KENYA

5.0 Introduction

- This lesson examines the political and economic organization of ethnic communities in Kenya prior to the establishment of colonialism. Two types of political organization are identified and distinguished; namely centralized and decentralized political systems. The economic organization of ethnic communities in the pre-colonial period is discussed. Finally this lesson examines the impacts of the establishment of colonialism on pre-colonial political and economic organization.

a. Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 5.2.1 Distinguish between centralized and decentralized systems of governance
- 5.2.2 Discuss the economic organization of ethnic communities in Kenya in the pre-colonial period
- 5.2.3 Examine the impacts of colonialism of pre-colonial political and economic systems.

5.2.1 Centralized and Decentralized Political Systems in Pre-colonial Kenya

- Prior to the 19th century African governments had coherent, comprehensive and people focused political institutions. African governments were organized along councils of elder's, lineages, clan systems, and age set systems. A government with these characteristics is described as decentralized. In pre-colonial Africa, there were also other political systems that had well defined systems of power separation with defined functions. These political systems had elaborate structures and a political figure head who was referred to as chief or king. This second category of African Political systems has been described as centralized or state societies. Every centralized African political entity had a specific title for its chief executive. The chief executive among the Wanga in Kenya was called Nabongo while the Baganda called their chief executive Kabaka. Kenya was predominantly a decentralized society in the pre-colonial era. It was only the Wanga community in western Kenya and the city states of Mombasa, Malindi and Lamu that had state systems or centralized systems of government.
- In decentralized societies political power was exercised horizontally through a council of elders. There was no single political figure head. Decisions were arrived at through deliberations by a council of elders. However by the mid 19th century the Nandi, Kipsigis, Luyia, Mijikenda, Meru, Masaai, Kikuyu, Gusii and Luo had reached an advanced stage in the process of transforming their decentralized systems of government into state systems. Among the Nandi and Kipsigis there had emerged an office of the Orkoiyot. The holder of the office of the Orkoiyot had attained executive powers by the mid 19th century. The same scenario was being replicated among the Kikuyu, Meru, Gusii, Luhya where the offices of the Mugambi, Mogaka, Omwami were being perceived as executive offices.

5.2.2 Economic Organization of Pre-Colonial Communities in Kenya

- Pre-colonial African communities in Kenya relied on different modes of production to sustain themselves economically. This included hunting and gathering, pastoralism and peasant farming.
- Hunting and gathering has been part of east African economic system of production for many centuries. It is practiced by communities that live in mountain regions of Mount Elgon, Mau forest and Mount Kenya. The Okiek speakers also called Dorobo constitute some of the hunter/gatherer communities in east Africa. This system of production relies on forest regions as the assets or means of production. The products exploited include; ivory, rhinoceros horns, ostrich feathers, mushrooms, vegetables, honey, gum copal, meat products from antelopes, rabbits, wild goose, guinea fowl, wild beasts, wild pigs, gazelles etc. This system is associated with the first phase of human civilization in the Stone Age era.
- Pastoralism was a major system of production in Kenya in the pre-colonial period. Pastoralist societies occupied northern, eastern and rift valley regions in Kenya.

Pastoralism was practiced in semi-Arid and arid regions of eastern Africa. It was also practiced in highland areas that were free from tsetse fly infection. Among the communities in eastern Africa that were predominantly pastoralist include: Turkana, Pokot, Marawet,, Keiyo, Nandi,Tugen, Kamba, Borana, Samburu ,Masaai and Somalia.

- Peasant farming is a system of economic that has been part and parcel of African civilization for many centuries. Peasant farming refers to a form of agriculture which is characterized with rudimentary technology, small scale farming, farming for subsistence goal and use of outdated methods such as shifting of cultivation. Usually peasant farming is associated with Bantu speaking communities in east Africa. It is the Bantu speakers that have been associated with iron technology which was instrumental in the growth of agriculture. These include the Kikuyu, Gusii, Mijikenda, Meru, and Luhyia, However, it has to be noted that other east African communities from river/ lake, plains and highland Nilotes also engaged in peasant farming.

LESSON SIX

THE COLONIAL EPISODE IN KENYA

6.0 Introduction

- This lesson examines the colonial episode in Kenya. It begins by addressing the motives behind the scramble, partition and eventual conquest of Africa. African reaction to the imposition of colonial rule is examined. Establishment of colonial rule and the nature of British colonial administration is tackled.

6.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 6.2.1 Address the motives behind the scramble partition and conquest of Africa
- 6.2.2 Distinguish between British direct and indirect system of administration
- 6.2.3 Examine the structure of British Colonial Administration in Kenya

6.2.1 Motives behind the Scramble, Partition and Conquest of Africa

- Colonialism refers to a process where a foreign government establishes political and economic power over another country using force. European nations partitioned Africa at the Berlin Conference of 1884 and 1885. Britain got the territory which is now represented by Kenya and Uganda. Thus, Britain assumed political, economic and cultural sovereignty in Kenya. Indigenous systems of cultural, economic and political organization were marginalized and eventually declined. British colonialism lasted till 1963 when Kenya attained independence. A number of reasons have been adduced to explain why Africa was colonized. They include;

(i) Economy Theory

- This theory was advanced by scholars such as; Rosa Luxemburg, J.A. Hobson and V.I Lenin. Rosa Luxemburg and J.A. Hobson argued that overproduction, surplus capital, and under-consumption in industrialized nations led them “to place larger and larger portions of their economic resources outside the area of their present political domain, and to stimulate a policy of political expansion so as to take in new areas”. To them, this saw the “economic tap root of imperialism”. Simply put Africa was colonized for economic exploitation.

(ii) Psychological Theories

Social Darwinism

- The publication of Charles Darwin’s The Origin of Species provided scientific backing for the belief in the primacy of the European race. Darwinians justified the conquest of the so called “subject races or backward races” by the ‘master races’ as the inevitable process of ‘natural selection by which the stronger dominates the weaker in the struggle for existence. The partition of Africa was consequently seen by them as part of this inevitable, natural process.

Evangelical Christianity

- It was argued that the partition of Africa was due to a ‘broader missionary’ and humanitarian impulse which aimed at the regeneration and civilization of African peoples. Civilization of African was through converting to Christianity and adopting western culture.

Social Atavism

- In his book Imperialism and Social Classes, Joseph Schumpeter advanced a sociological explanation for the new imperialism. According to him, this imperialism was impelled by the natural desire of man to dominate his fellow men for the sake of dominating them. Imperialism therefore is a collective national egotism; the objectless disposition on the part of the state to unlimited forcible expansion.

(iii) Diplomatic Theories

These give purely political explanations of the partition of the African continent. They include;

National Prestige

- The greatest exponent of this theory is C.J. Hayes who argues that the new imperialism was basically a nationalistic phenomenon. European nations driven by national prestige sought to acquire colonies to show that their domestic victories could be enhanced outside.

Balance of Power

- F.H. Hinsley emphasized Europe's need for peace and stability at home as the primary cause of the partition. He argued along with A.J.P. Taylor that colonies offered a diplomatic valve to relieve political tension at home. When conflicting interests in Africa threatened to destroy European powers partitioned Africa in order to preserve the European diplomatic balance.

Global Strategy

- Exponents of this view, R. Robinson and J .Gallagher stress the strategic importance of Africa to India for Britain. They blame the partition of Africa on the impact of atavistic 'proto-nationalists' movements in Africa which threatened the global strategic interests of European nations. Africa was occupied not because of what it could offer materially to the Europeans – for it was economically worthless – but because it was threatening European interests elsewhere.

Next	British Colonial Administration in Kenya

6.2.2 British Colonial Administration in Kenya

- The period between 1900 and 1914 has been referred to as the period of pacification. It is a period which witnessed the European conquest and occupation of Kenya. Various categories of African responses to European rule have been identified as follows;
 - (i) Resistance,
 - (ii) Diplomacy and
 - (iii) Collaborations
- Having crushed the various rebellions over Africans, the British set out to establish an administrative apparatus in the newly conquered territories. This was the beginning of British rule that lasted more than 60 years. After the declaration of the East African protectorate status over Kenya on 1st July 1895, the British now embarked on setting up an administration. The British chartered the British East African company of William McKinnon to administer the East African protectorate in 1888 (This included Kenya and Uganda). Upon receiving the royal charter of incorporation, the company changed its name to the Imperial British East Africa Company.
- The British employed two main methods of administering their colonies in Africa, namely; Direct rule and Indirect rule.

6.2.2.1 Difference between Direct and Indirect Systems of British Administration in Colonial Africa

- (i) Indirect rule was a system under which the British recognized the existing African political system and used it to rule over the colonies.

- (ii) Direct rule was a system where the Europeans/the British entrenched themselves in the direct administration of their colonies. Indigenous political and administrative institutions and leaders are replaced with European systems.

6.2.2.2 British Direct Rule in Colonial Kenya

- In Kenya, the British lacked both funds and experienced personnel to facilitate their administration. Kenya also did not have a reference model of an administrative system – like that in Buganda Kingdom. It was only among the Wanga section of the Abaluhya and the Maasai where traditional chiefs that were recognized by the British existed. Where the institution of chieftainship did not exist the British appointed chiefs. In their administration of Kenya, the British employed two levels of administrative framework. This included; Central government and Local government. Local governance was through the Local Native Councils (LNC)

6.2.2.3 Central Government: Hierarchy of Colonial Administration in Kenya

- Governor- Headed the Colony
- Provincial Commissioners- Headed a Province
- District Commissioners- Headed a District
- District Officers- Headed a Division

LESSON SEVEN

DEVOLVED GOVERNANCE IN KENYA: STRUCTURE AND CHALLENGES

7.1 Introduction

This lesson examines the structure of the Government of Kenya under devolution. To begin with the structure of government at two levels is captured. The functions of the office holders at different levels is outlined. Finally this lesson discusses the challenges that face devolved governance in Kenya.

7.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 7.2.1 Examine the structure of Government of Kenya under devolution
- 7.2.2 Outline the functions of office holders at different levels.
- 7.2.3 Discuss the challenges that face devolved governance in Kenya.

7.2.1 Structure of Government of Kenya Under Devolution

The government of Kenya is structured at two levels; Central Government and Devolved Governments.

7.2.1.1 Central Government

(i) Executive

Being by far one of the most crucial arms, it consists of the following primary members:

- President
 - Deputy President
 - Cabinet Secretaries
 - Attorney General
 - Director of public prosecutions
- Headed by the president of the republic, the executive is guided by an underlying framework of laws. The laws require the president to appoint between 14 and 22 cabinet secretaries reflecting ethnic and regional diversity. Appointments of cabinet secretaries and other key positions such as that of the attorney general, secretary to the cabinet, high commissioners, consular representatives and ambassadors are vested in the president subject to approval by parliament.

The Legislature

- According to the new constitution, the Legislature is held responsible for advocating for the people's interest in law making. In addition to that, it is vested in two houses; The National Assembly and The Senate.

The National Assembly

Membership

- Elected members per constituency- 290
- Women Representative- 47
- Nominated - 12

- Members of the national assembly are obligated to represent their constituents and all the special interests within their respective constituencies
- Enactment of legislation for both county and national government
- Approval or disapproval of revenue allocation presented by the senate, determining the national distribution across the counties.
- Check the conduct of the executive and other state officers and if necessary initiate the process of removal of president, deputy president and other state officers.
- Exercise oversight role of state organs and approve the state of emergency and declaration of war.

The Senate

Membership

- Elected Senators- 47
- Nominated women- 16
- Nominated youths/disabled- 4

The roles of the Kenya Senate under the new constitution are:

- Debate and approve county bills
- Determine the allocation of national revenue to be distributed according to the counties
- Represent the interests of the counties at the national level
- Consider and determine the resolution of impeachment of the president or his/her deputy

The Judiciary

As the name implies, this arm of government mainly centers on the Kenyan Judicial system. The Kenyan Judicial system adheres to a hierarchical system as follows;

- (i) The Supreme Court being the highest organ,
- (ii) The Court of Appeal,
- (iii) High Court,
- (iv) Magistrate's Courts and

(v) Subordinate Courts.

The chief justice is the president of the Supreme Court and is appointed by the president subject to the approval of the National Assembly.

7.2.1.2 Devolved Government

The devolved government, proposed during the making of the new constitution, is primarily geared towards achieving two main objectives.

- Involve the people in governance
- Allow better supervision and implementation of policies at the grass root level

The county Government, which has since replaced the provincial administration, constitutes of a county assembly and county executive. The responsibilities of the county assembly include:

- Exercising the powers of enacting laws at the county level
- Acting as an oversight instrument on the county executive
- Approval of plans and policies for smooth operation and management of resources and county institutions

Even at county level, democratic principles are observed. The people elect the members of the county assembly at Ward level. All the same, additional slots are reserved for nominations. This ensures that membership is well distributed by gender, marginalized groups and persons with disability.

Next	Challenges of Devolved Governance in Kenya

7.2.2 Challenges of Devolved Governance in Kenya

- Even with the several positive impacts of devolution in Kenya, several problems inhibit its implementation fully. Some of the challenges include;
 - (i) The rough transition processes
- Over the last couple of years, Kenyans have been spectators in the pull-and-push between the National and county governments regarding the mandates of both and allocation of resources. Sometime back, the Council of Governors pointed an accusing finger at the state for derailing the transition process. As the two lock horns, service delivery at county level becomes affected. When the counties took over health docket, there has been a go-slow in the services offered and strikes lasting months. Some analysts think that the transition process is to blame for the problem.
 - (ii) Human Resources gaps
- What is the point of having resources, when the people in charge cannot manage? Well, this is the problem facing most of the counties. In fact, the hiring process of county executives and other officials is questionable. Some county governments seem to be rewarding allies, rather than appointing professionals to get the job done.
 - (iii) Lack of resources and capacity for efficient service delivery
- The county governments have a problem in the management of current resources. As it is, salaries and wages account for a significant portion of the county budgets therefore, compromising other development efforts.
 - (iv) Fiscal Challenges
- While the National and county legislature oversees the budgeting process, the National Treasury still has a lot of power and control over the fiscal policy. The county governments have not yet come up with systems or measures to handle county treasury operations.

(v) Inclusion is still a problem

- Ethnicity still plays a major role in securing votes and representation in the counties. Some minority communities in areas such as Migori, Turkana, Garissa, Bungoma and Samburu feel left out. Also, the participation of special groups such as the disabled, youth and women has not increased significantly as a result of devolution.

(vi) Revenue Allocation

- The 15% of National revenue allocated to counties may not be enough to enable them to discharge all their duties. While some counties such as Nairobi and Kiambu collect a lot of revenues, the resources are still not enough for efficient service delivery. However, the counties need to be more accountable before they receive extra funding from the government.

LESSON EIGHT

NATIONAL VALUES, PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNANCE AND PROMOTION OF GOOD GOVERNANCE IN KENYA

8.1 Introduction

This lesson examines national values and principles of governance. The promotion of good governance through transparency and accountability is captured. Finally this lesson questions the ability of government to promote transparency and accountability through the elimination of corruption.

8.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 8.2.1 Outline national values and principles of governance as per the Constitution of Kenya 2010.
- 8.2.2 Understand promotion of good governance through transparency and accountability.
- 8.2.3 Question the capacity of government to promote transparency and accountability by eliminating corruption.

8.2.1 National Values and Principles of Governance

- According to the Constitution of Kenya 2010 the State is under an obligation to respect, protect, promote and fulfil the rights as contained in the Bill of Rights. Of equal importance are the national values and principles of governance that have now been captured in the Constitution. These values which form part of essential fundamental beliefs help in guiding decision-making, the actions and behavior of citizens and to a great extent influence the relationship between citizens. Engagement between communities in the country borrows a lot from these values and principles. The Constitution of Kenya gives prominence to national values and principles of governance. Article 10 (2) of the Constitution provides the national values and principles of governance as follows:
 - (i) Patriotism, national unity, sharing and devolution of power, the rule of law, democracy and participation of the people;
 - (ii) Human dignity, equity, social justice, inclusiveness, equality, human rights, non-discrimination and protection of the marginalized;
 - (iii) Good governance, integrity, transparency and accountability; and
 - (iv) Sustainable development.
- These values and principles bind all State Organs, State Officers, Public Officers and all other persons in interpretation of the Constitution, enacting and or interpreting any law; and implementing public policies and decisions. Article 232 of the Constitution further provides for the principles that inform public service which include:
 - (i) High standards of professional ethics;
 - (ii) Efficient, effective and economic use of resources; responsive, prompt, impartial and equitable provision of services;
 - (iii) Accountability for administrative acts;
 - (iv) Transparency and provision to the public of timely, accurate information; fair competition and merit-based appointments and promotions;

8.2.2 Promotion of Good Governance, Transparency and Accountability

- Good governance, integrity, transparency and accountability are principles of governance which provide impetus for rapid social, economic and political transformation. Apart from the executive order, the Government has focused on the implementation of laws that touch on good governance, transparency and accountability. Among the laws enacted and being implemented include: the;
 - (i) Leadership and Integrity Act
 - (ii) Public Officer Ethics Act,- which regulates the conduct of public officers,
 - (iii) Ethics and Anti-Corruption Act, -that address mechanisms to fight against corruption and
 - (iv) Public Finance Management -This regulates the use of public finance by both national and county Government. .

- However, despite this robust move to realize these values, the Governments are far from achieving this objective. Among major challenges faced include:-
 - (i) Rampant Corruption allegations involving senior public officers. A number of Cabinet Secretaries, Principal Secretaries and other officials are reported to be under investigation for being involved in grand corruption cases.
 - (ii) Misuse of public funds. The country has been hit by allegations on misuse of billions of shillings in many government flag ship projects including; the Eurobond borrowing transactions, the National Youth Service (NYS), the Youth Development Fund. Reports of misuse of funds allocated to county officers are also very rife as contained in the Auditor General's Reports.
 - (iii) Unethical conduct of some senior public officers. Senior Government officials have been implicated in public land grabbing across the country.

LESSON NINE

GLOBALIZATION PROCESS AND ITS IMPACTS ON AFRICAN SOCIETIES

9.1 Introduction

- This lesson begins by examining the concept globalization. It defines globalization as a process by which the world becomes one through interconnectedness and uniformity. The impacts of globalization on African culture are discussed. Finally the question as to whether globalization is positive or negative is addressed.

9.2 Lesson Learning Outcomes

By the end of this lesson, you will be able to:

- 9.2.1 Understand the concept globalization
- 9.2.2 Examine the impacts of globalization on African cultures.
- 9.2.3 Assess whether globalization is positive or negative

9.2.1 The Concept of Globalization

- Globalization typically refers to the process by which different economies and societies become more closely integrated, and concurrent with increasing worldwide villagization. To comprehensively understand globalization there is need to assess the economic, political, cultural, social and risk changes that influences the process. This complex process is linked to the economic power of the big, industrialized states and the great transnational companies. The process itself brings together countries with different development views, with different religions and cultures, and most important third world countries and their former colonial masters. It is also important to discuss ways of understanding, controlling and diminishing of the negative effects and collateral losses associated with globalization. Since the '80s, the world economy has become increasingly “connected” and “integrated”; on the one hand the decreasing transportation costs and the diffusion of Information and Communication Technologies have implied a fast downgrading of the concept of “distance”, while – on the other hand – gross trade, Foreign Direct Investment (FDI), capital flows and technology transfers have risen significantly. In most countries, the current wave of “globalization” has been accompanied by increasing concern about its impact in terms of employment and income distribution.

Questions to raise;

- (i) Does globalization create new winners and losers in North-South relations?
- (ii) How have developing countries and the poorest people responded to globalization?
- (iii) Can globalization be tamed?
- Globalization as a concept refers to the ways in which developments in one region can rapidly come to have significant consequences for the security and well-being of communities in quite distant regions of the globe. Interregional flows and networks of interaction within all realms of social activity from cultural to the criminal on different regional levels from global to local.

Next	Globalization and African Culture

9.2.2 Globalization and African Culture

To understand cultural globalization we need to raise the following questions;

- (i) What have been the effects of globalization on African culture?
 - (ii) Is cultural homogenization an American agenda?
 - (iii) What is the global implication of cultural homogenization?
 - (iv) Culture-wise, is Africa at the mercy of forces of globalization?
- Technology has created the possibility and even the likelihood of a global culture. The Internet, fax machines, satellites and cable TV are sweeping away cultural boundaries. Global entertainment companies shape the perceptions and dreams of ordinary citizens, wherever they live. This spread of values, norms, and culture tends to promote Western ideals of capitalism.

Impacts of Globalization on African Cultures

- (i) Regarding the poor countries, globalization is accused of entrenching poverty by widening that gap between the rich and the poor, between countries and within countries..
- (ii) Globalization is seen as the renewed attempt to consolidate the re-colonization.

Every element of the current crisis of collapse of industries, collapse of educational and health facilities, collapse of infrastructure (power, transportation, water supply and communication), degradation of the environment, inflation, escalating debt bill, weakening of the currency, ethnic and religious violence and collapse of public security is traceable to the renewed attempt to consolidate the re-colonization process.

- (iii) Globalization threatens the economic, socio-cultural, linguistic, educational and political independence of all people in the world such that the question that befuddles every nation is how to survive. This sentiment prevails when globalization is viewed from the cultural perspective.
- (iv) Globalization is destructive to African culture and development. Because of the close integration and interaction of different peoples which it engenders, globalization exerts more cultural pressure than people imagine.
- (v) Globalization is seen as the direct consequence of the expansion of European culture across the planet via settlement, colonization and cultural domination. It is purely an attempt to spread western culture with its attendant capitalist, socio-economic and political nuances. From a cultural perspective, most Africans see globalization as merely another form of imperialism or colonialism.
- (vi) Peculiar African cultural values, like languages, are being eroded by the pop culture brought about by globalization. Greeting norms, cuisine, appearance and dressing, custom, occupations, religion and cultural components are giving way to acculturation “the suppression and subjugation of African culture,” a tragic phenomenon that is fast destroying the original cultural complexion of not only the budding generation but even the adults.
- (vii) Globalization of the education system has socialized us to view African cultures as being weak when compared with western culture and consequently, bound to lose in a battle against western cultures. As a result there is a gradual admittance of western culture at the detriment of our own culture.
- (viii) African traditional religion has been eroded and replaced by western religions. Some scholars have lamented that the traditional African worship and belief of gods and goddesses has been washed away by belief and worship of the one God; the Christian God.

- (ix) African youth are rapidly losing touch with cultural values and that this could be seen in the alien culture which they portray; their bizarre dressing, dancing and language and so on which invariably affect other aspects of social life. The younger generations of teenagers in Africa have for the most part abandoned their African culture and language, and often religion and try to ape western culture.
